The Coverdell Fellows program provides a great opportunity for returned Peace Corps Volunteers to continue their service to underserved communities while also pursuing graduate studies at a reduced cost. The University of Michigan hosts Coverdell Fellows at several schools and colleges across the university including:

- Gerald R. Ford School of Public Policy
- School for Environment & Sustainability
- School of Information
- School of Social Work
- New Program [1]: School of Public Health Department of Nutritional Sciences
- Penny W. Stamps School of Art & Design

To learn more, visit the Paul D. Coverdell Fellows Program [2] website.

As a Coverdell Fellow you receive the following benefits:

- Financial assistance: Financial aid may include tuition reduction, full scholarships, stipends, or assistantships.
- Professional experience: Your internship will allow you to apply what you learn in the classroom to a professional setting.
- Helping others: As part of the program requirement, you’ll provide much-needed assistance to some of the United States' most underserved communities.
- Furthering the Peace Corps mission: By sharing your experiences in classrooms and in communities, you will help fulfill the Peace Corps Third Goal: to promote a better understanding of other peoples on the part of Americans.
- Choice: Earn your master’s degree, doctoral degree, or professional certificate from one of over 150 programs at more than 90 university partners across the country. The choice is yours!
- Federal jobs: If you enroll in school soon after service, your one-year noncompetitive eligibility status [3] for federal jobs applications may, at the hiring agency's discretion, be extended up to three years from your close of service date.